

EMPOWER!

*Why it's Time for Managers to Stop
Feedback Conversations
(And what they must do instead)*

Actuate Microlearning

India's First Live-Action Video Microlearning

You can't win a race if you drive looking in the rear-view mirror!

Table of Contents

“Junk feedback conversations!”	1
The Fight_or Flight_Response	8
Think Feedforward,_not Feedback	11
What a Feed-Forward Conversation Looks Like	13
How Feed-Forward Conversations Help	18
Feedforward conversations – A process that builds champions	20
Video-Format Microlearning from Actuate Microlearning	22

Chapter 01

“Junk feedback conversations!”

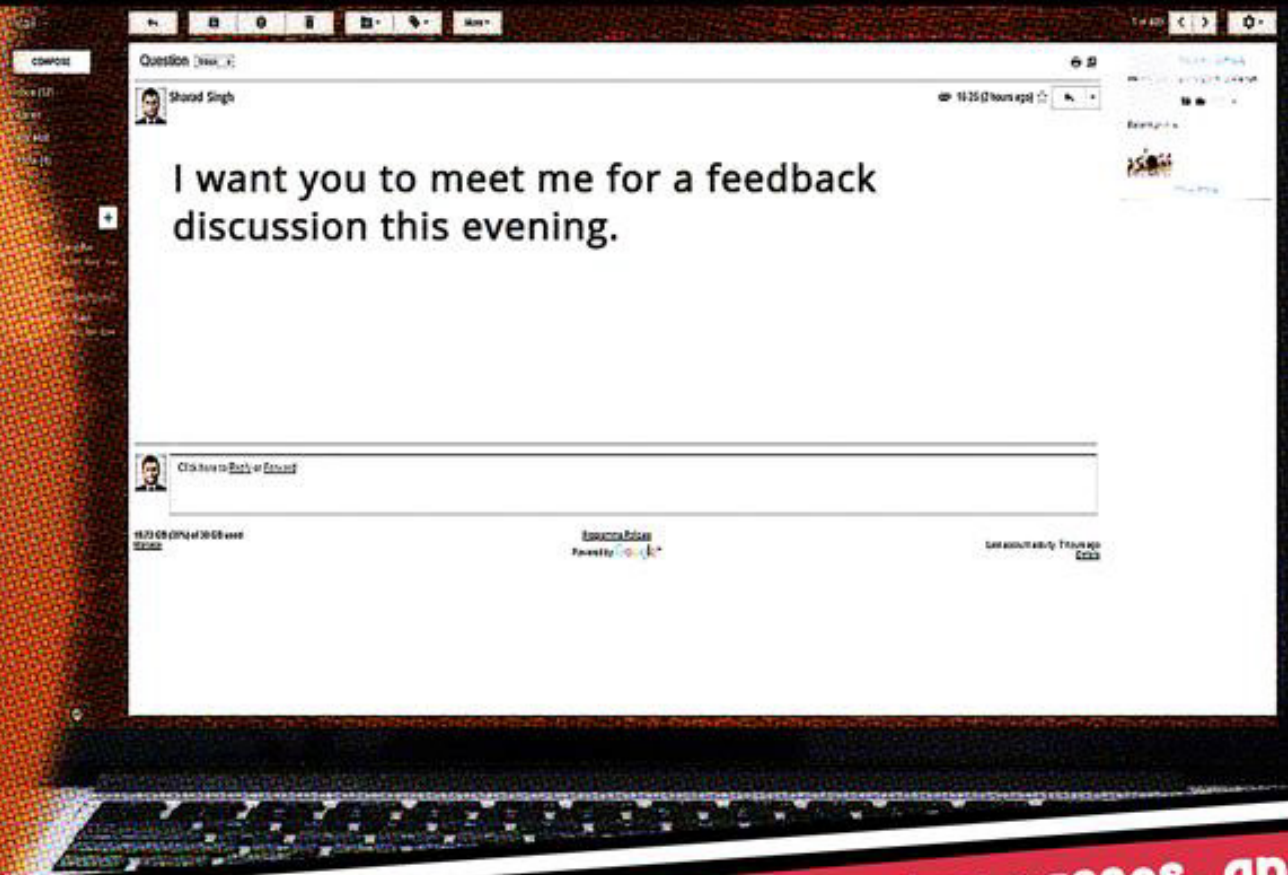

“It’s time for managers to stop conducting feedback conversations!”

Does the statement above sound blasphemous to you?

After all, isn’t regular feedback supposed to be the mantra for exceptional performance?

We’ll answer that question by looking at this conversation between Sharad, a manager, at an international logistics and freight forwarding company and Manish, his team member.

Manish gets an email from Sharad...

Manish, is seen getting nervous... the day passes, and Manish is seen nervous and edgy.

The feedback meeting:

Manish, here's a mistake I noticed you have made that has caused the delay in the cargo being dispatched. What were you thinking? Why did you do that?

Eh, boss, the reason that happened was...

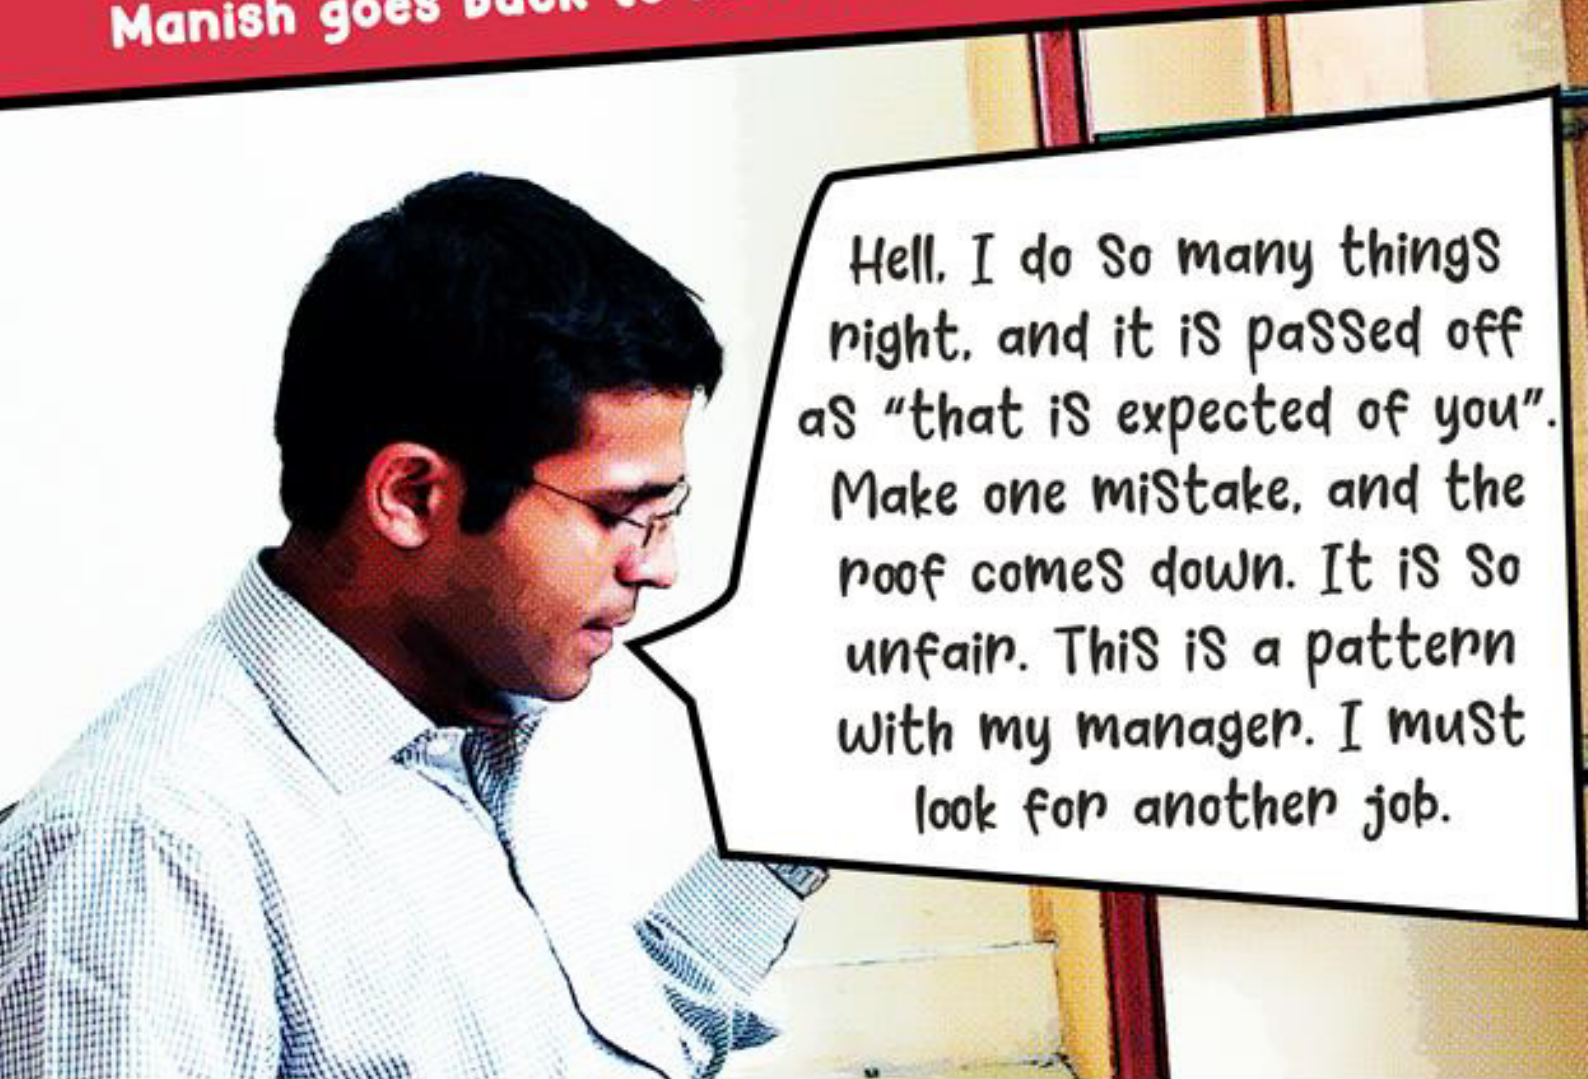

Manish lists a couple of reasons

Sharad gets aggressive

A man with dark hair, wearing a white button-down shirt, is shown from the chest up. He has a serious, slightly aggressive expression. He is gesturing with his right hand, pointing his index finger. In the background, there is a wooden wall with several yellow and pink sticky notes. To the left, a desk is visible with a polka-dot mug and some papers.

No, those are simply excuses! How can you make such silly mistakes? I don't want to see this error repeated, or there will be a high price to pay.

Manish goes back to his desk and thinks to himself

A man with dark hair and glasses, wearing a light blue and white checkered shirt, is shown in profile, looking down. He appears to be sitting at a desk. The background is a plain wall.

Hell, I do so many things right, and it is passed off as "that is expected of you". Make one mistake, and the roof comes down. It is so unfair. This is a pattern with my manager. I must look for another job.

Sounds familiar?

Remember how anxious and edgy you felt the day you knew you were due for feedback from your manager

Also, if you are a manager, have you been anxious and nervous about giving feedback to your team members? Worrying perhaps about how they would take it and how the conversation might transpire? Most managers, we at Actuate Microlearning have experienced, feel likewise.

Here's what we at Actuate Microlearning have found is...

...the issue with feedback conversations:

- These conversations often morph into an exercise in “Let me prove to you that you are useless” rather than a means of finding a way to bring about change or improvement
- They mostly leave people feeling abused and demotivated

That's terrible!

The prospect of receiving feedback:

- Puts the person at the receiving end of feedback on their guard

- Leads to this individual spending more time composing a defence of self, rather than listening attentively to what the manager is saying can be done to improve matters

Feedback conversations, consequently, end up doing little good to anyone concerned.

What might help is understanding why this happens, and a better approach that managers can adopt.

Chapter 02

The Fight or Flight Response

David Rock is the co-founder of the NeuroLeadership Institute and credited with coining the term 'neuroleadership'.

His research, which is referenced below shows that..

When we at the receiving end of a 'rating' or 'appraisal', feedback, our brain goes into the 'fight or flight' mode.

Now, we won't delve too much into this subject here. Suffice it to say that the fight or flight response is how the brain responds to stressors. It will counterattack – fight – or it will choose to escape it completely – flight. When the brain is in this mode, it is not open to critical evaluation of feedback, nor learning and understanding

Rock's research shows that when faced with the prospect of receiving feedback, we shift into fight or flight mode instead, of a learning or creative mode. As a result, unless conducted correctly, the act of providing feedback, or performing a performance appraisal can actually be counterproductive.

Terrible, no?

Feedback sessions and the appraisal process are meant to help people do better and grow in their work. Unfortunately, these conversations usually end up having the opposite effect.

One reason for this relates to....

...when Feedback is Usually Given

Feedback, we, at Actuate Microlearning, have seen, are generally reserved for occasions when something has gone wrong. Also, appraisals and ratings deal with the past, and - contrary to its originally intended purpose - often ends up being about why someone does not deserve a better rating.

In our experience of working with managers, we have seen that there is often little or no developmental focus on the part of the manager during the performance discussion or appraisal process.

Not much time – if any at all - is spent on the creation of a developmental plan for the individual concerned.

So, what then are managers to do?

Chapter 03

Think Feedforward, not Feedback

Feedforward conversations focus on the solutions and not problems. Paraphrasing the oft-quoted proverb, we can't change the past, but we can always impact the future. Drawing a parallel for managers,

Instead of dwelling on the mistakes of the past:

- 1. It makes more sense to consider the future
- 2. Set goals that impact this future
- 3. Devise plans to achieve them

Feedback focuses on the past, what occurred and what went wrong.

Feedforward, on the other hand, is future-focused; about what could be done right, and how.

This difference in perspectives – from feedback to feedforward - has been shown to have a profound effect on how the conversation transpires and therefore on the team member's acceptance of the inputs provided.

In the next chapter, we will explore just what a feed-forward conversation looks like.

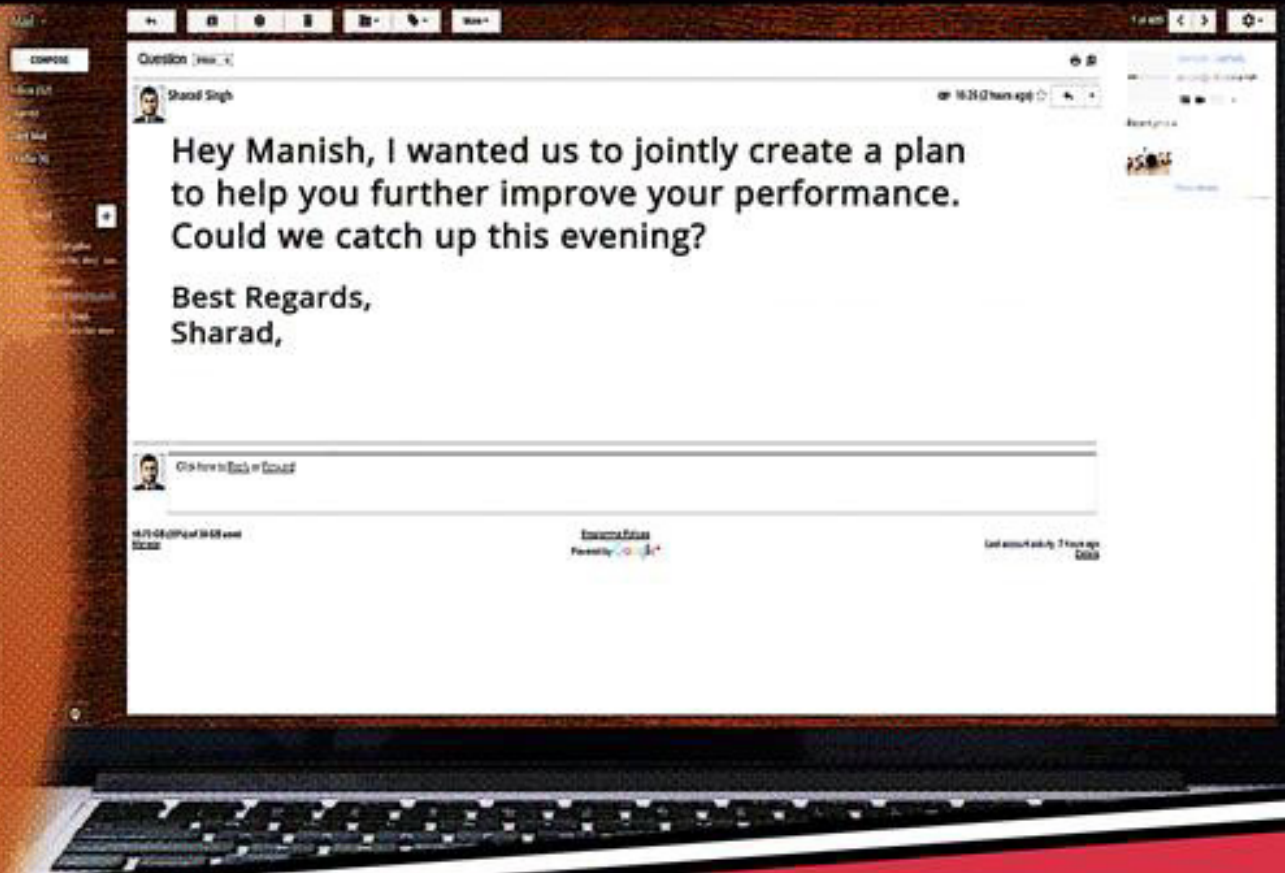

Chapter 04

What a Feed-Forward Conversation Looks Like

Manish gets an email pop-up in his mailbox

At the meeting...
After identifying the cause of the issue through a respectful dialogue with the team member

How might you avoid committing this mistake in the future?

Manish suggests a few alternatives.

Sharad thoughtfully considers Manish's points for a few seconds

Mmm... You've shared some interesting options. I believe the first option is more viable. However, here's another suggestion, one that had helped me in a similar situation... Do you think this might work for you?

Sharad gives his suggestions...

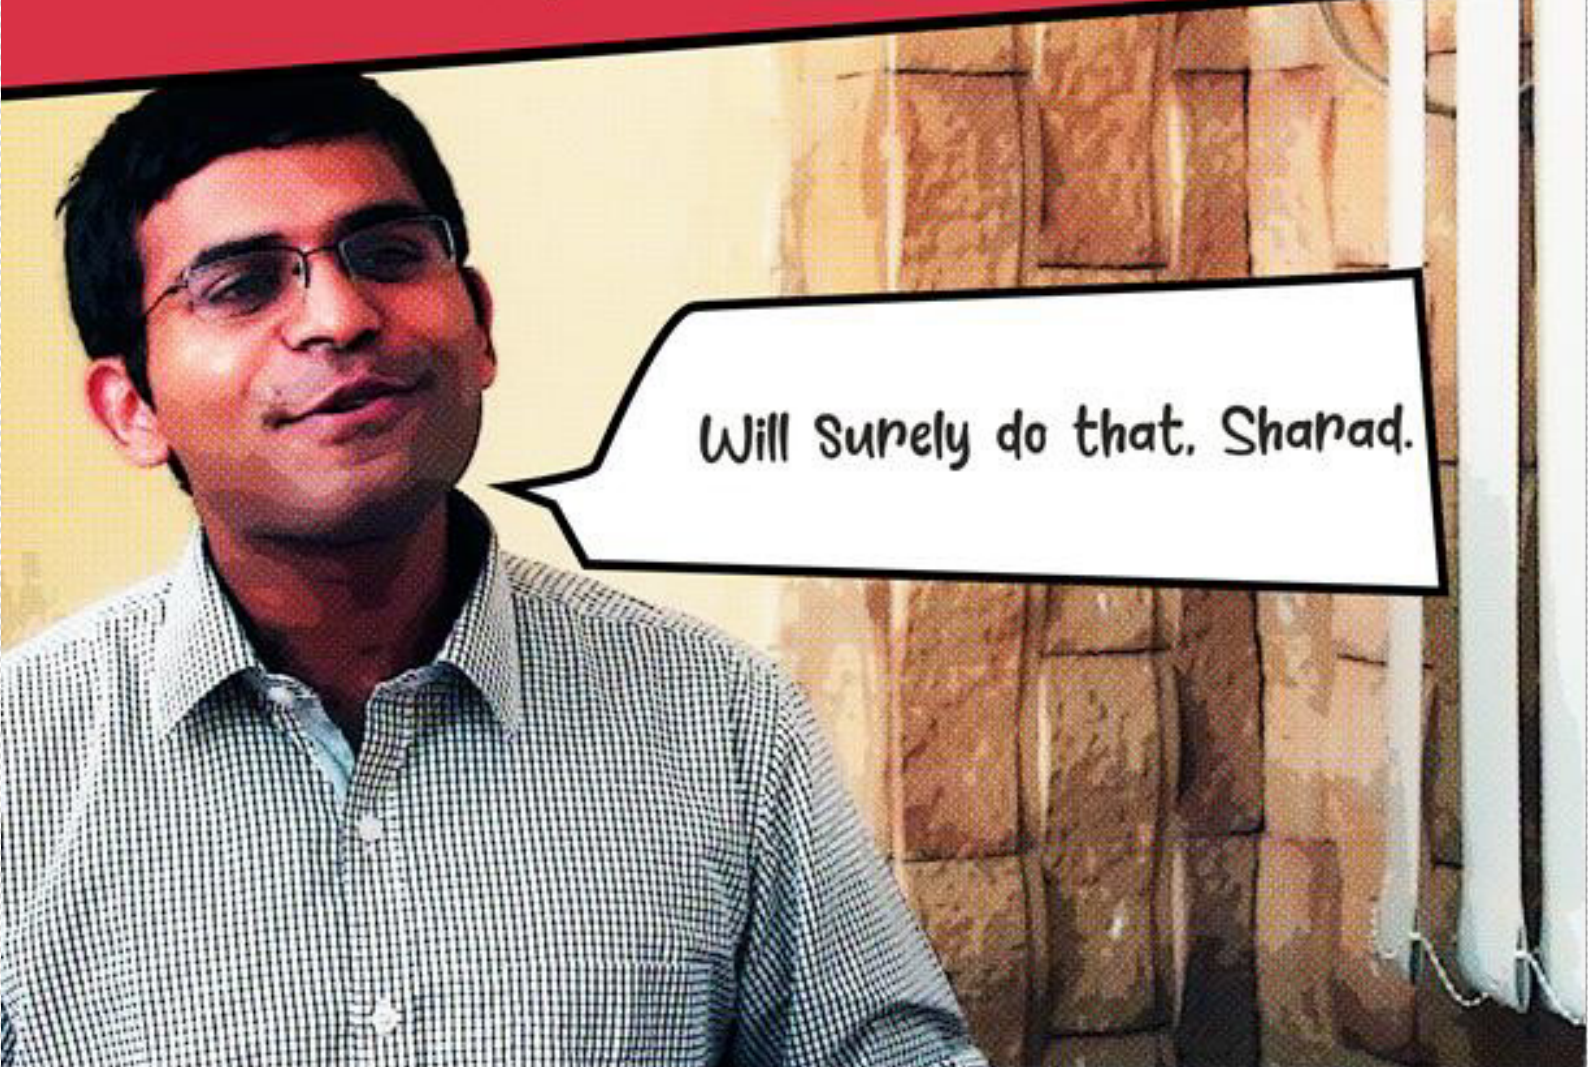

Yes, I think it will.

A man with dark hair, wearing a white button-down shirt, is sitting at a wooden desk. He is looking slightly to his left with a thoughtful expression. On the desk, there is a cup with pens and some papers. In the background, there is a wall with several yellow sticky notes.

Can I get your commitment that you will work on getting it right the next time?

Expressing gratitude

A man with dark hair and glasses, wearing a light-colored checkered button-down shirt, is smiling. He is standing in front of a wall with a stone-like texture.

Will surely do that, Sharad.

A man with dark hair, wearing a white button-down shirt, is sitting at a desk. He has a thoughtful expression, looking slightly to his left. His hands are resting on the desk, and he appears to be holding a pen. The background shows a wooden wall with some yellow and pink sticky notes.

Great. I know you will face a similar situation tomorrow. Can we meet post lunch to discuss how that approach helped you, and the way forward? In the meantime, should you need any further support, do let me know.

Feeling positive

A man with dark hair and glasses, wearing a light-colored patterned button-down shirt, is smiling. He is looking towards the right side of the frame. The background is a wooden wall.

That sounds like a plan. Thank you for your help.

Chapter 05

How Feed-Forward Conversations Help

As you can see, the outcome of the feedforward conversation between Sharad and Manish is far more positive and effective. As compared to the feedback conversation that we had seen earlier, which involved accusations, the consequent excuses, and no concrete plan on how future mistake could be avoided, in the feedforward conversation Sharad not only highlighted the issue, but they jointly arrived at a plan to prevent the error from being repeated.

Chapter 06

Feedforward conversations – A process that builds champions

Feedforward conversations:

- Are improvement-oriented
- Fuel the process of development
- Can be implemented by employees at all levels in the organisation

If institutionalised, feedforward conversations can define the very culture of the organisation and have a tremendous impact on business metrics

It is about time that we start employing feedforward conversations. It has the power to turn regular employees into workplace superheroes who can drive extraordinary business results.

It's time we junked feedback conversations.

You simply can't win a race if you drive looking in the rear-view mirror.

Video-Format Microlearning from Actuate Microlearning

As you surely know, video-format microlearning courses are perfect to:

1. Engage the modern-day learner (especially the burgeoning millennial and Gen-Z workforce)
2. Create learning journeys for your learners
3. Ensure better course offtake and completion rates

Twenty-Nine Video-Format Microlearning Courses You Could Use Right Out-Of-The-Box

Considering the advantages that video-format courses offer, we, at Actuate, have created a catalogue of twenty-nine courses - a total of 283 video lessons, 52 hours of learning - on behavioural, leadership, cognitive and technical skills topics.

You could procure these off-the-shelf, get them branded for you and have them deployed pretty much immediately for your learners!

Here're a Few Reasons Our Clients Choose Us:

1 Our courses follow a micro-video format
(the format of choice for the modern-day learner)

2 Users love our courses
(you should see some of the fabulous feedback we've received!)

3 Users find our courses relatable and relevant

4 Our courses are built for the phone

5 We work closely with you in ensuring people use these courses

Indicative Client List

Over the last nine years of our existence, we've served over seventy organisations across industry verticals. Some of our esteemed clients include Kotak Securities, ICICI Lombard, Zydus Cadila, Edelweiss, Angel Broking, Motilal Oswal, DCB Bank, Lodha, Tata Capital, DESIS, Prudential, to name but a few.

Do Get in Touch!

If you'd be interested in knowing more, please suggest a date and time we could possibly speak/ meet. Thirty minutes should suffice for our discussion.

You could reach us at:

☎ : + 91 9820196121

✉: jerson@actuatemicrolearning.com

Actuate Microlearning

India's First Live-Action Video Microlearning

www.actuatemicrolearning.com